Vietnam experienced over a millennium of Chinese domination beginning in 111 BCE when the Han dynasty conquered the region. This period profoundly influenced Vietnamese culture, governance, and society, although it also sparked persistent resistance efforts.

The First Chinese Domination (111 BCE – 938 CE)

During this extensive era, Chinese administrative systems, Confucian philosophy, and the Chinese writing system were introduced. Despite these influences, Vietnamese people maintained distinct cultural practices and staged several uprisings to reclaim independence.

Resistance Movements

Notable leaders such as the Trưng Sisters and Lady Triệu emerged, leading rebellions against Chinese rule. These figures remain national symbols of patriotism and resistance in Vietnamese history.

Cultural Syncretism

The fusion of indigenous and Chinese elements resulted in a unique Vietnamese culture characterized by Confucian social order, Taoist spirituality, and Buddhist religious traditions.

Origins of Vietnamese Independence

Vietnam's independence was ultimately restored in 938 CE after the decisive Battle of Bạch Đằng River, where Vietnamese forces defeated the Southern Han dynasty. This victory marked the beginning of an autonomous Vietnamese state and a new era in its history.

Ngô Dynasty and the Early Independent State

Following independence, the Ngô dynasty established governance structures aiming to consolidate power and develop a centralized state. This period set the groundwork for future dynasties and territorial expansion.

Colonial Administration and Economy

The French imposed a centralized administration and developed plantations, mining, and transportation networks. However, colonial policies often favored French interests, resulting in economic disparity and social unrest among Vietnamese peasants and intellectuals.

Vietnam War (1955–1975)

The ideological conflict between the communist North and the anti-communist South escalated into the Vietnam War, involving the United States and other international actors.
