Overview of the Survey Corps

The Survey Corps, also known as the Scout Regiment, is a pivotal branch of the military in the Attack on Titan universe. Their primary mission is to venture outside the safety of the Walls and explore Titan territory to gather intelligence and reclaim land for humanity. This branch is distinguished by its high-risk operations beyond the Walls, making it the most dangerous yet crucial unit. The Survey Corps plays a significant role in humanity's survival, often tasked with confronting the Titans head-on. Their courage and resolve are central themes throughout the series, symbolizing hope and resistance. Understanding the Survey Corps' purpose and challenges sets the foundation for deeper knowledge of their structure and tactics.

Organizational Structure and Ranks

The Survey Corps operates under a defined military hierarchy that ensures discipline and operational efficiency during their perilous missions. The structure is designed to facilitate quick decision-making in combat and exploration scenarios. Ranks within the Corps range from new recruits to seasoned commanders, each with specific responsibilities and authority levels. Leadership is critical in the Corps due to the high stakes involved in their missions, and commanders often lead from the front. Coordination between squads and companies allows the Survey Corps to undertake complex operations and adapt to dynamic battlefield conditions.

Rank Hierarchy

The rank system in the Survey Corps mirrors traditional military organization with clear distinctions between enlisted personnel, officers, and command staff. Key ranks include:

- Cadet: Trainees undergoing rigorous preparation before joining active units.
- Private/Soldier: Entry-level members assigned to squads for field duties.
- Corporal and Sergeant: Non-commissioned officers responsible for small unit leadership.
- Lieutenant and Captain: Officers commanding squads and companies during missions.
- Commander: The highest-ranking officer overseeing all Survey Corps operations.

This structured hierarchy ensures effective leadership and accountability within the Corps.

Training and Equipment

Training for the Survey Corps is intense and comprehensive, designed to prepare soldiers for the unique challenges posed by Titan encounters. Cadets undergo physical conditioning, combat drills, and specialized instruction in the use of gear essential for survival. Mastery of the Three Dimensional Maneuver Gear (3DMG) is crucial, as it allows soldiers to navigate vertical environments and engage Titans effectively. Beyond physical skills, training also emphasizes teamwork, strategic thinking, and mental resilience.

Three Dimensional Maneuver Gear (3DMG)

The 3DMG is the signature equipment of the Survey Corps, enabling rapid movement and vertical mobility. It consists of a harness system with grappling hooks and gas-powered propulsion, allowing soldiers to zip through urban and forested environments. Proficiency with the 3DMG is vital for executing hit-and-run tactics and targeting Titans' weak points. Maintenance and tactical use of the gear are covered extensively during training sessions.

Combat and Survival Skills

Survey Corps soldiers receive training in various combat techniques, including swordsmanship and close-quarters combat. Emphasis is placed on precision strikes to the nape, the only vulnerable spot of Titans. Additionally, survival skills such as evasion, situational awareness, and first aid are integral components of the training program. These skills enhance the soldiers' ability to operate autonomously or in small groups during reconnaissance missions.
