Origins of the Aztec Civilization

The Aztec civilization, also known as the Mexica, began its rise in the early 14th century. Originating as a nomadic tribe, they settled on the marshy islands of Lake Texcoco in present-day Mexico. Here are key points regarding their origins:

1. Migration: The Mexica migrated to central Mexico from the north, guided by a vision that led them to the site where they would establish their capital, Tenochtitlan.
2. Founding of Tenochtitlan: In 1325, the Mexica founded Tenochtitlan, which would grow into one of the largest cities in the world by the time of the Spanish conquest.
3. Triple Alliance: By the late 15th century, the Mexica formed a powerful alliance with two other city-states, Texcoco and Tlacopan, creating the Aztec Empire that dominated central Mexico.
