German Offensive Strategy

Germany's plan involved a rapid advance through the Ardennes, a region considered difficult terrain and lightly defended by the Allies. The strategy relied on the element of surprise, bad weather to ground Allied aircraft, and the use of elite Panzer divisions. The Germans intended to capture key road junctions and supply routes to facilitate their advance toward Antwerp.

Allied Defensive and Counteroffensive Tactics

The Allies, initially caught off guard, quickly adapted by consolidating their forces and establishing defensive strongpoints. The defense of Bastogne by the 101st Airborne Division was crucial. Once weather conditions improved, the Allies utilized superior air power to disrupt German logistics. The eventual counteroffensive leveraged coordinated infantry, armor, and air support to reclaim lost ground.
