Historical Context of Black History Month

Black History Month traces its origins back to 1926, when historian Carter G. Woodson established "Negro History Week." Woodson aimed to encourage the teaching of Black history in schools and promote awareness of African American contributions to society. The week was chosen to coincide with the birthdays of Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass, two figures pivotal to the history of African Americans in the United States.

In 1976, as part of the nation's bicentennial celebrations, President Gerald Ford officially recognized Black History Month, urging the public to celebrate the often-overlooked achievements of Black Americans. Since then, February has become a time to reflect on the past, recognize the present, and envision a future where equality and justice prevail.
