What Are Betrayal Bonds?

Betrayal bonds are emotionally charged attachments that arise in relationships where one person consistently betrays the trust of the other. These bonds can manifest in various forms, including:

1. Emotional Abuse: Constant criticism, gaslighting, and manipulation create a dependency on the abuser's approval.
2. Financial Control: One partner controls the finances, making the other feel trapped and unable to leave.
3. Isolation: The abuser isolates the victim from family and friends, deepening the bond through loneliness.
4. Intermittent Reinforcement: The abuser alternates between affection and abuse, keeping the victim hopeful for change.
