Understanding Consonant Digraphs

Consonant digraphs are combinations of two letters that together produce a single sound. In the case of "ch," "sh," "th," and "wh," each digraph has its own phonetic pronunciation:

1. The "ch" Digraph

The "ch" digraph typically produces a /tʃ/ sound, as heard in words like "chocolate," "chair," and "church."

2. The "sh" Digraph

The "sh" digraph produces a /ʃ/ sound, commonly found in words such as "shoe," "fish," and "shout."

3. The "th" Digraph

The "th" digraph can produce two sounds: the voiced /ð/ sound in "this" and the voiceless /θ/ sound in "think."

4. The "wh" Digraph

The "wh" digraph produces a /w/ sound, as in "what," "where," and "whale."

Understanding these sounds is the foundation for effective reading and writing.
