Understanding the Clifton Strengths Assessment

The Clifton Strengths Assessment is a psychometric tool created by Donald O. Clifton and developed by Gallup to identify an individual's natural talents. It is based on positive psychology and focuses on enhancing strengths rather than fixing weaknesses. The assessment measures 34 talent themes across domains such as Strategic Thinking, Relationship Building, Influencing, and Executing. By pinpointing dominant themes, the tool helps individuals understand how they think, feel, and behave in various situations.

History and Development

The assessment was first introduced in the late 1990s following extensive research on human talents and performance. Donald Clifton's pioneering work emphasized that people and organizations achieve more when they maximize their innate strengths. Since then, the tool has evolved and is now used globally by millions for personal growth and team effectiveness.

How the Assessment Works

The Clifton Strengths Assessment consists of a series of paired statements that respondents answer, choosing the one that best describes them. This process typically takes 30 to 45 minutes. The results provide a ranked list of the individual's top talent themes, commonly referred to as "signature strengths," which reflect the areas where they have the greatest potential for building skills and expertise.
