Defining Civilization

The definition of civilization can vary depending on the academic discipline, but in the context of AP World History, it is generally understood to refer to a complex society that has developed advanced cultural, political, and technological systems. Here are some standard criteria used to define a civilization:

1. Urban Centers

- Civilizations typically emerge in urban settings, where people gather to live, work, and engage in social activities.
- These urban centers serve as hubs for trade, governance, and cultural exchange.

2. Social Stratification

- Societies exhibit a hierarchy of social classes, where roles, status, and wealth are distributed unevenly.
- This stratification often leads to distinct groups such as leaders, priests, artisans, and laborers.

3. Centralized Government

- Civilizations have organized political structures that establish laws and maintain order.
- Centralized governments often evolve into complex bureaucracies that manage resources, military, and public works.

4. Economic Systems

- Advanced economic systems develop, including agriculture, trade, and possibly currency.
- These systems support the urban population and facilitate the exchange of goods and services.

The Evolution of Civilizations

Civilizations are not static; they evolve over time, influenced by internal dynamics and external factors. Understanding the evolution of civilizations is crucial in AP World History for several reasons:

1. Environmental Factors

- Geography plays a significant role in the development of civilizations, affecting agriculture, trade, and resource availability.
- Civilizations often rise and fall due to environmental changes, such as droughts or floods.

2. Cultural Exchange
