Early Life and Path to Incarceration

David Allan Coe was born on September 6, 1939, in Akron, Ohio. His early life was marked by instability; his father was an abusive alcoholic, and his mother abandoned the family when he was young. Consequently, Coe spent a great deal of his childhood in foster homes, where he faced numerous challenges.

In his teenage years, Coe's rebellious nature surfaced. He quickly became involved in petty crime and was more interested in music than school. His love for music was ignited by the sounds of country and blues, which would later influence his songwriting. However, his criminal activities escalated, culminating in his arrest.

First Incarceration

Coe's first significant run-in with the law occurred when he was just 17. He was convicted for theft and sent to the Ohio State Reformatory, a facility known for its harsh conditions. This experience was pivotal in shaping Coe's understanding of authority and his views on life.

While incarcerated, Coe began to focus on music more seriously. He wrote songs and honed his craft, often performing for fellow inmates. Despite his aspirations, Coe found himself drawn back into a life of crime. He was arrested again for a series of thefts and was ultimately sentenced to a lengthy prison term. This second stint in prison, which lasted for several years, would prove to be another turning point in his life.
