- Mobutu's Dictatorship (1965-1997): Joseph Mobutu seized power in a coup in 1965, establishing an authoritarian regime that lasted over three decades. His rule was marked by corruption, human rights abuses, and a cult of personality.
- Transition and Conflict (1997-2003): Mobutu was overthrown by Laurent-Désiré Kabila, leading to a period of civil wars known as the First and Second Congo Wars (1996-2003), which involved multiple nations and armed groups.
- Post-war Era (2003-Present): The DRC has struggled to stabilize its political environment since the wars, with various peace agreements and elections, but challenges remain persistent.
